Behavior supports and interventions look very different when students are learning remotely. Schools have the responsibility to update their intervention plans and help students learn replacement behaviors and reduce the behaviors interfering with their learning. Parents are an important part of this process.

- How to determine what updates or changes might need to be made to your student's behavior intervention plan in the remote setting
- How to collect data on your student's current behavior intervention plan
- How to collect data on any strategies for changes to the behavior intervention plan that you have implemented in the remote setting
- How to address the concerns or struggles in the remote setting with the IEP team

Who should attend?
