Augmentative and alternative communication (AAC) helps children and young adults who cannot fully rely on speech to express themselves, connect with others, and participate in daily life. When AAC is used both at school and at home, it becomes a powerful tool for building confidence, independence, and meaningful communication.

Join us for a family-friendly session focused on what AAC is, why it matters, and how families can support its use in everyday routines. We'll share practical tips, simple strategies, and insights from other families to help you feel more confident supporting your AAC user at home.

- Help you understand what AAC is and how it supports communication and connection
- Provide strategies for using AAC in everyday routines and interactions at home
- Share tips to build your confidence as an AAC communication partner
- Highlight free resources and family-centered support

Who should attend?

Families with a child or young adult with an IEP or IFSP who uses—or may benefit from AAC.
