Epilepsy can affect much more than seizures. It can influence learning, memory, attention, emotional well-being, friendships, and a student's overall school experience. Families often have questions about school accommodations, advocating for their child, and helping educators understand epilepsy.

Join the Epilepsy Foundation of Michigan to learn how epilepsy may impact students in the classroom, explore strategies for partnering with schools, and discover ways to support both educational success and mental health. We'll discuss accommodations, communication with school teams, and practical approaches to creating a safe, supportive, and inclusive learning environment for students with epilepsy.

- Learn how epilepsy can affect learning, behavior, and mental health.
- Explore school-based supports and accommodations that may benefit students with epilepsy.
- Gain strategies for effectively communicating and partnering with educators to support their child's success.

Who should attend?

Families of young adults with disabilities, students with disabilities, school staff, and other community members.
